

Northwest Cancer Specialists Changes Its Name to Compass Oncology

Name change reflects the expert care, treatment and guidance provided by a community leader in cancer care.

Portland, Ore. (Oct. 18, 2011) —Northwest Cancer Specialists, P.C., the largest independent cancer and hematology treatment practice in the region, announced that it has changed its name to Compass Oncology.

“Our 42-physician practice has offered multi-disciplinary cancer care to the Portland and Vancouver communities for over ten years. Some of our physicians have been practicing in the area for four to five decades,” said Brad Perrigo, executive director, Compass Oncology. “Our new name is the first step in an outreach plan to tell the community about the cancer treatment resources we have, such as a robust clinical trials program, medical and radiation treatment options, breast and gynecologic surgery, genetic risk evaluation and lab and diagnostic services.”

Compass Oncology’s ongoing commitment to seeing newly diagnosed cancer patients within two days and its seven convenient locations brings accessible state-of-the-art care to the Portland and Vancouver region. The practice allows patients to remain close to their homes and their support network of family and friends. As a result, patients access the best possible treatment with the least amount of disruption to their daily lives.

“Our practice centers on patient care, and our physicians and staff are known for their commitment, collaboration and compassion to the treatment of those with significant illnesses,” said Dr. Gregory Patton, practice president, Compass Oncology. “The name “Compass Oncology” speaks directly to the fact that when our patients are referred to us, they are often overwhelmed, not just by the news that they have cancer, but also by the many decisions and potential directions that are before them. Like a compass, we provide our patients with a clear path and direction to hope and healing.”

Compass Oncology remains an affiliate of The US Oncology Network, one of the nation’s largest networks of community-based oncologists dedicated to advancing cancer care and improving the cancer patient experience.
